Before RILEY, COLLOTON, and BENTON, Circuit Judges.

RILEY, Circuit Judge.

The facts of this case are virtually identical to those outlined in Integrity Floorcovering, Inc. v. Broan-Nutone, LLC, No. 07-1824.¹ We incorporate by ¹Unlike Integrity Floorcovering, Inc., Chicago Avenue Partners, Ltd. contended the bathroom fan at issue was not hard-wired into the building structure, but utilized a plug. This difference does not alter the conclusions reached here. Whether considered fully hard-wired or not, the fan required installation significantly beyond plugging the unit into an outlet. The fan required ventilation directly to the outside air, not into walls or ceiling space. The fan was to be fastened by nails into a stud or joist, with a duct run to a hole in the roof or wall. Assembly required the services of someone “. . . familiar with methods of installing electrical wiring . . . [or] a qualified
